Compliance Quick Facts Sheet

California Proposition 65

California Proposition 65, which resulted in the Safe Drinking Water and Toxic Enforcement Act of 1986, was enacted in California as a ballot initiative in 1986. Under the law, the U.S. state of California maintains a list of chemicals that meet the state's definition of chemicals known to cause cancer, birth defects, or reproductive harm. Businesses are required to provide a "clear and reasonable" warning before knowingly and intentionally exposing anyone in California to a listed chemical at a level that poses risk of such harm.

A product need not contain a warning if the company can make a determination of no significant risk and no observable effects, in accordance with the regulations. The California implementing office provides "safe harbor" levels for many of these chemicals to be used in determining whether a warning is necessary or businesses can also make their own determinations if such a level is not available in the regulation.

Avery Dennison Product Compliance

Avery Dennison's product compliance team provides information about any Proposition 65 chemicals that are present in our products. Even if an Avery Dennison product does not directly expose a person in California to the listed chemical, customers may incorporate our materials into consumer products sold in many jurisdictions including California.

The regulations provide the requirements for the content and method of transmission for consumer product exposure warnings. Most Avery Dennison products are not consumer products and do not bear the consumer product warnings, but Avery Dennison will provide information on its products to help its customers to comply with these requirements, as needed. The requirements also address occupational exposure warnings. Avery Dennison does comply with federal Hazard Communication Standard (HCS) regulations and the amended California requirements state that a warning to employees meets the Prop 65 requirements if it fully complies with the HCS.

If a California Proposition 65 substance is present in one of our products, information will be available in the Avery Dennison compliance portal.
